Estimated United States Wheat Crop for 1938

Throbbing North American grain markets followed the publication of United States Department of Agriculture's estimate of wheat production in that country for the year. The estimate was 450,631,000 bushels of wheat. This is the smallest crop in forty years, 100 million bushels less than last year, and is below the year previous.

On the other hand, the United States carry-over, estimated at 390 million bushels on July 1, will provide total stocks of 880 million bushels available for the forthcoming crop year.

With the total crop, including new crop and carry-over, estimated at 880 million bushels on July 1, will provide total stocks of 880 million bushels available for the forthcoming crop year.

Of course the United States carry-over, estimated at 390 million bushels on July 1, will provide total stocks of 880 million bushels available for the forthcoming crop year.

TAIT WHITE HAS BIG LEAD IN GOLF TOURNAMENT

BROOKS Golfer Eaters Second Round With Ten Stroke Advantage—Tournament Results Show Brooks July 20

With his lead of ten strokes over his nearest competitor, Tait White, ace of the Brooks Golf Club, looks like a certain winner of the district tournament. Only Orlie, Orlie, Orlie, holes left to play, and only White is completely off his game he should complete the tournament well in the lead.

White toured the Brooks course in 78 strokes, while Smiley had the first straight holes of the district tournament which is being sponsored by the Banff Springs Golf Club.

Frank Hughes and D. MacLean, both of Brooks tied for second place with scores of 86, eight behind White.

Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Bell, of Bowron, also attended the stampede on several holes, cost White many valuable strokes.

The remaining eighteen holes of the district tournament may well be over for the Bassano course on Sunday, July 20. The winner of the tournament will go to Banff for the finals on August 26, 28, and 29.

District winners will be the guests of the Banff Springs Golf Club on those days.

Keith will have the advantage of playing the last half of the district tournament on his own club course, but Tait White's eleven stroke lead will be a big handicap to overcome.

The Calgary exhibition and stampede association is to be commended on the success of this year's program. The attendance was considerable and the weather was fair, and the quality of the program was very good. The Calgary stampede is one of the finest shows of its kind on the North American continent.

Prosperity must surely be coming back. Calgary oil stock prices and ransom figures quoted by kidnappers in the U.S. are going up.

The opinion seems to be unanimous that this is the driest summer on record. Old timers are scratching their heads to remember when we ever had such a long dry spell, and most of them agree that this year is the longest.

The west is wondering whether the rise in wheat prices in a speculative market will be followed by an apparently higher price. The large world surplus wheat stocks are believed in some quarters to be sufficient to prevent any further price increase or even to hold present prices. The wheat market here at many who believe the world wheat carrier has been greatly exaggerated, and that there will be a brisk demand for wheat and good prices in the future. With prospects of less than a average crop in Canada, a small crop in the U.S. and the possibility that she will have to import to meet home requirements, and with sub-average yields in some other large wheat growing countries, there is good reason for believing that the world carrier will be reduced and that the extremely low price period is passed.

It takes a lot of nerve, skill, and experience to dash in an airplane from New York to Berlin, across northern Russia, on to Alaska, and Four deaths in Alberta within the past few days, brought home with tragic impressiveness the present danger at the railway crossing. Carelessness in looking for approaching trains or trying to beat the train to the crossing have been the cause of hundreds of deaths. Motorists cannot be too careful at railway crossings.

AN AMBITIOUS SCHEME

The building of a new sports ground, the newest endeavor of the Bassano Board of Trade, is an ambitious undertaking, and one well worthy of that public body which has sponsored so many community enterprises.

The new sports ground scheme, if it goes through (and there is every likelihood that it will) is designed to give Bassano a sports ground with many advantages over the old fair grounds. It will be surrounded by a perimeter belt of trees and bushes, providing protection from wind and dust; it will be conveniently located, the site being only a few blocks from the main business section of the town; it will consolidate all sports interests of the community providing as it does for a baseball diamond, race track, athletic track, swimming pool, and picnic grounds all within its boundaries. It leads itself readily to major improvements which can be brought about with irrigation and waterworks, such as the growing of flower beds and the installation of drinking fountains and public lavatories. There is, in fact, no limit to the improvements which can be made in this beauty spot of the western countryside. It will take a number of years to do it, but there is no doubt of its feasibility.

The only objection raised against the scheme is that the ground may be too flat. It is proposed to have a half mile track for race horses. There is room, for a three-eighth mile track, but it has not yet been determined whether a half mile track can be squeezed in. The objection to a half mile track is that the turns are too sharp for race horses.

Even though the half mile track cannot be included in the plan, the many other advantages of the new sports ground so far outweigh the disadvantages of the one objection that it can be justified. The new sports grounds will be a vast improvement over the old one, and will give Bassano the best sports and athletic field in this part of the province.

THE MEDICINE CABINET

In the bathroom of most homes, there is set in or hanging on the wall a receptacle, with two or three compartments, known as "medicine cabinet".

The name implies that the contents consist of drugs and other materials to be used in connection with the treatment of sickness or injuries.

A medicine cabinet is very different from most others; it contains a collection of toilet articles, a few bottles of medicine, usually some iodine and an assortment of anything from rusty razor blades to hairpins and a bottle of perfume.

Every home should have a medicine cabinet, and this cabinet should be locked. Medicines, even though they are not poisons, should not be left about where children can get at them.

The box of tablets may be tempting to the young child who quite naturally acquires knowledge of the world by feeling and tasting.

There is no excuse for keeping medications and the like in the bathroom. Keep them locked in a cupboard and brought out when needed.

The bathroom cupboard is the natural repository for toilet articles and it should be reserved exclusively for this purpose.

And holds through the storm, first-true.

Fad and folly, the whims of an hour, Mayicker and rancid and shrill, But the living granite of truth will tower.

Long after their age is still;

Labor and love and virtue—

Time does not dim their glow;

Though the world may say, in their old age, that the world is

"We've outgrown all that, you know!"

But a lie, whatever the guise it wears,

Is it so that it was of yore,

And a truth that has lasted a mili-lion years is good for a million more.

Dates Fixed

the speaker, "when women will get men's wages."

further deterioration. Small bad damaged crops, in a few small areas but it is generally conceded that the attendant moisture has more than offset the damage due to this cause.

The greater part of the wheat crop with the exception of that in the Peace River district, is now in head, and harvesting operations have commenced and is progressing under most favorable conditions. Oats and barley are in the shot blade.

Unless rains relieve the situation within a short time, there will be distinct shortage of foodstuffs in these districts where drought has been most severe.

Small beats may be canned for vegetables by packing in sterilized jars after blanching fifteen minutes and sterilizing them to the quart jar side. A teaspoon salt, one teaspoon tomato, one tablespoon vinegar, then fill to overflowing with boiling water and process one hour.

TOMATO JUICE, one of the newer home-canned products, depends on the choice of either acid ripe tomatoes or the flavorless green tomatoes.

The green tomatoes are the best in nutritive value. Stem and core the tomatoes, slightly crush, and bring almost to the boil, season to taste and seal in bottles or jars, and process in manner for bottles and jars.

Strawberries retain their color and remain distributed in jars when kept by the overnight method.

Simmer for five minutes in syrup, (2 cups sugar to 2 cups water) leaving uncovered overnight. In the morning pack in jars and process as above.

Outstanding among the new jellies has been that made from Prunus

Tomentosa, or Nanking Cherry,

while the under-ripe Compton Cherry makes an excellent product, as also does rhubarb if used at its best.

For the jam the use of currants and gooseberries rank high for standard tart jellies, and Hibiscus apple and Dolgo crab for mild jelly, the latter being colorful.

In jam making among the hybrid plums the Red Wing variety stands out, while the Damson plum also gives popular apricot-flavored jam. If commercial pectin is used in their preparation more of the natural flavor and color is retained.

The hybrid plums are best canned

after being peeled and the skins

are taken off. The Rosella crab is packed and cooked in the jar as a high quality product of smooth texture, suggesting canned pears.

CANNING HINTS

The canning season opens in early May at the Dominion Experimental Station, Morden, Manitoba. Asparagus comes first. This with other non-acid vegetables as peas and beans, should have one teaspoonful of lemon juice added to the quart jars to prevent development of botulism.

Small beats may be canned for vegetables by packing in sterilized jars after blanching fifteen minutes and sterilizing them to the quart jar side. A teaspoon salt, one teaspoon tomato, one tablespoon vinegar, then fill to overflowing with boiling water and process one hour.

TOMATO JUICE, one of the newer home-canned products, depends on the choice of either acid ripe tomatoes or the flavorless green tomatoes.

The green tomatoes are the best in nutritive value. Stem and core the tomatoes, slightly crush, and bring almost to the boil, season to taste and seal in bottles or jars, and process in manner for bottles and jars.

Strawberries retain their color and remain distributed in jars when kept by the overnight method.

Simmer for five minutes in syrup, (2 cups sugar to 2 cups water) leaving uncovered overnight. In the morning pack in jars and process as above.

Outstanding among the new jellies has been that made from Prunus

Tomentosa, or Nanking Cherry,

while the under-ripe Compton Cherry makes an excellent product, as also does rhubarb if used at its best.

If commercial pectin is used in their preparation more of the natural flavor and color is retained.

The hybrid plums are best canned

after being peeled and the skins

are taken off. The Rosella crab is packed and cooked in the jar as a high quality product of smooth texture, suggesting canned pears.

AWAKENED WOMAN

ELINORE BARRY

ELEVENTH INSTALMENT

"Well, what do you know? Frills been riding around town with her hair up! Her skirt! She's going to telephon the scandal to the papers."

The company consisted of Doc Ellison, Mrs. Ross and Clarice Emery, Charlie Gates, and Art Belman. Joyce wondered where the other women were.

"Don't suppose you got any girls while you're east, did you Neil?" asked Art Belman.

"Not a round," replied Packard.

The men proceeded to talk golf and baseball.

As the party broke up, Dr. Ellison said in an aside to Joyce, "Say, Frills, you're looking much better than you did two weeks ago. Has your head bothered you lately?"

At last they were all gone and Packard, closing the front door, came back to the living room and began to put out the lights. He yawned widely. "Gee, I'm sleepy. Got to be up early tomorrow. Going to bed now, Frills!" he asked, passing with his hand at the last light.

"Yes, I am," replied Joyce. She couldn't get the words out which she meant to say casually. Turning, she went upstairs, closely followed by Packard, who stood on the bottom step.

"I have missed that sleeping porch. Seems, as I'll never had any real air in those hotel rooms," remarked Packard when they were in the bedroom. "Once you get used to sleeping out, anything else seems stuffy."

They sat down in an appropriate silence to announce that she had decided to sleep in the house herself and Joyce, in an agony of embarrassment and indecision wandered over to her dressing table where she sat down and lighted another cigarette.

If he would only go to his own room and leave her alone! But Packard lingered, taking off his tie and unbuttoning his shirt while he talked.

He was now taking off his shirt, still trying to catch his breath. His sleeves, undressed, felt a wave of color burn her face and she sat rooted to the spot. To her great relief, however, he went off to wash himself, undressing elsewhere, and she heard him moving about in the bathroom.

She heard the door of the closet just a trifle ajar so that she could keep track of his movements. As he closed the bathroom door stood wide open.

"Shall I run a hot bath for you?" called Packard, "or are you going to take a shower?"

"Just a tub," he called out, "No tub, I'll take a shower when you get through."

"You needn't wait. I'm not using the shower," he called back cheerfully. "I want a real soak after being on the trail two nights."

She sat down again in the chair and listened tensely to the process of his bath. He splashed and whistled and to poor Joyce it seemed as if he would never finish.

Suddenly the whistling stopped abruptly and she heard him ejaculate. "I think I've got it," he said. Then raising his voice he called, "Say, Frills is a good kid and get me the soap, will you? I dropped it out and it skidded way over into the bathtub."

Joyce was petrified by this simple request. She was so startled that she failed to take refuge in what had been her salvation in other awkward moments, the conveniently temperamental dispensation of Frills. "Well, wait a minute, Phil. I'll get it for you." She got up and ran to the tub. Cool and tight about her, she emerged from the closet, found the cake of soap innocently lying on the blue carpet, picked it up, and entering the bathroom, thrust it into Packard's wet outstretched hand. She turned and left the room in a tumult of emotion.

"I wish he'd hurry," she fumed, with a sigh of relief that that awkward moment was over, though her heart still throbbed wildly. "I'm tired. I don't care if you didn't have a hard door I'd go and take a bath now. I simply can't do it, though." She sat down again and listened anxiously.

Presently she heard him rubbing himself vigorously and a few minutes later he appeared in the doorway in blue pajamas and slippers, his hair sticking up in damp rumpled confusion. How funny a man looked without a collar, she thought, and the pajamas seemed to fit him well and baggy. Lowering her eyes she shut the door after her and very quietly and carefully turned the little catch that locked it.

When she opened the door again she found the bathroom empty, but from the noise Packard implored her, "Gee, Frills, bring me a glass of water, like an angel, will you?"

Joyce wanted to retort crossly, but her naturally obliging disposition automatically assented. She got up, washed her hands, and getting a towel she went to the sunporch which lay in the shadow. The moon made it light enough, however, to see Packard's face vaguely.

He lay up in bed and took the glass when she brought him. As he did so she said hastily, "Good night! I'm going to sleep inside for a while." She turned away as she spoke, but she suddenly halted, the sentence before Packard had down the glass and stepped out of bed. He had seen her at the door and got his side of the affair and the word was doubled.

Suddenly her pleasure in the day was spoiled. A hurt feeling of resentment against him for ruining her happy mood seized her. She got his side of the affair and the word was doubled.

"Oh, say, 'sweetheart,'" he protested, "not my first night, home, Frills, I mean so... so loosened you, dear?"

Packard beat his head quickly and kissed her eagerly, not once but several times, then drew her closer still and kissed the back of her neck and said huskily, "Oh, sweetheart, you love me a little?" he whispered, his cheek laid against her hug. "Won't you love me? Somehow tonight you were so sweet, going out with me alone that way, and I got things which Frills has done to make this reaction so natural. She had been so good, too, when she had sat the table and were in the living room. Then suddenly she faced him and with flaming face said, "Look here, I want you to know that I wasn't lying just now when I said I had been a Matlaid two years."

Packard stood at bay. He looked bewildered. An expression of anguish hopefulness dawned in his face, but it was the cautious hope of one who has been hurt and disappointed too many times.

After fully five seconds' silence he said, "Doc knows I'm not the sort of guy he'd like to have, but he didn't follow her, but she heard his deep sigh as she went on into the other room and shut the door, her knees trembling a little.

She had seen him go and located him by his steps. She had thought over what had happened. This victory was hers, but she did not feel quite the satisfaction in it that she had felt in circumventing Matlaid.

Just as she was about to leave, she heard Packard whistling as he dressed and she debated whether to let him go and have breakfast with him or to let him get away without seeing her.

"I'll get out of bed and instead of so quiet that she concurred. Nell had gone downstairs. She had just taken a dress from a hanger and had come out to put it on in front of the long mirror when she was joined by Packard, who was dressed and she debated whether to let him go and have breakfast with him or to let him get away without seeing her.

"Just a tub," he called out, "No tub, I'll take a shower when you get through."

"You needn't wait. I'm not using the shower," he called back cheerfully. "I want a real soak after being on the trail two nights."

She sat down again in the chair and listened tensely to the process of his bath. He splashed and whistled and to poor Joyce it seemed as if he would never finish.

"Gee, this is great. Are you going to eat breakfast this morning?" he asked, leaning against the foot of the bed.

"I'll give Roxie a surprise, eating breakfast together," she remarked, as they entered the dining room. "Good morning, Roxie. You're my blessed Dickie!"

"Out with Sam," responded Roxie. She too smiled, but there was a puzzled look about her face as she did so.

"Oh, then I'm going out to get some," exclaimed Joyce, "you start eating, I'll be right back," and she dashed off through the kitchen and into the dining room, where she sat down at the table, whom she was eating with a bored expression out of the stable door.

"I wonder if he'd get too tired to go along with me if I go out to ride on Rosita. What do you think?" asked Joyce, as she began her breakfast.

"I doubt if he'd need to long run," she said, smiling. "Just remember that a man like Nell won't stand pushing too far."
